Background & Criteria for Nominations to the Wall of Honor

The Virginia Women's Monument Commission sought nominations from across the Commonwealth of women who should be considered to have their names inscribed on the Wall of Honor. The Commission enlisted the help of distinguished historians in choosing women to be honored, and ample room will be left on the wall for additional names to be added periodically in years to come.

- The nominee must have been a native Virginian or have lived a great portion of her life in Virginia, and be known and recognized as a Virginian, or have achieved or contributed in a significant manner while living in Virginia.
- Must no longer be living and have died at least ten years prior to consideration.
- The nominee must have demonstrated notable achievement, made a significant contribution, or set an important example, within her chosen field of endeavor, her region or at the state or national level. Significance will be assessed within the context of what was customary for a woman to have achieved or contributed in the context of the particular time, place and circumstances in which she lived and worked.
- Consideration will be given to representation from each century of Virginia history and each region of the state, and to the full range of backgrounds from which women came and the many of the fields of endeavor in which they were involved.

The names inscribed on the Wall of Honor are not meant to be a comprehensive list of Virginia's most notable women. Rather, the names are intended to represent the many inspiring women who made significant contributions or achievements during their lifetimes.
